

THE RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE COMMUNITY COLLEGE

THE CC has the responsibility to inform its applicants and students about the availability and the range of accommodations.

THE CC has the responsibility to evaluate applicants based solely on their abilities. If an evaluation method or criteria has a negative effect on an applicant with a disability, the college will seek reasonable alternatives.

THE CC has the responsibility to make reasonable adjustments in the instructional method and evaluation system for a course when these have a negative impact on a disability.

THE CC has the responsibility to adjust, substitute or waive any requirements/course that has a negative impact on a disability and is not fundamental to the student's academic program or to the essential competencies of the course.

THE CC has the right to identify and establish the abilities, skills, and knowledge necessary for success in its programs and to evaluate applicants on this basis.

THE CC and its faculty have the right to identify and establish the abilities, skills and knowledge that are fundamental to their academic programs/courses and to evaluate each student's performance on this basis. These fundamental program/course goals are not subject to accommodation.

THE CC has the right to request and review documentation that supports requests for accommodation. Based on this review, the college has the right to refuse an unsupported request.

THE CC and its faculty have a right to select among equally effective methods of accommodating a student with a disability.

THE CC and its faculty have the responsibility to guarantee student rights to confidentiality regarding disability information.
